Part Two: Index of Directors 1343

A Note to the Reader

We have tried to make A Cast of Thousands as complete and easy to use as possible. Part I, "The Casts," is organized alphabetically by title; movies with the same title are sorted by year. The year listed for the movie is the year of its release. The studio is the releasing studio. Production companies, if different from the releasing studios, are usually not listed. For foreign films, the producing countries are listed in parentheses. Foreign films are usually dated by their release in their native country, not their release in the United States. All directors are named, including multiple and uncredited ones. Multiple titles are also listed and cross-referenced. (As a rule, the worse the movie, the more titles it has. For example, the Gamera the Monster series routinely had three or four titles, in both English and Japanese.)

Movie titles are generally alphabetized word by word. Act One comes before Action, followed by Action in Arabia. Punctuation marks inside a word (periods, hyphens, apostrophes) are treated as if they are breaks between words. Thus D.C. Cab and D.O.A. come before Da, and A-Haunting We Will Go before Abandon Ship!

Asterisks are used in Part I to indicate Academy Award winners. One asterisk (*) next to a movie title, director, or actor's name signifies Best Picture, Best Director, or Best Actor or Actress. Two asterisks () signifies Best Foreign Film or Best Supporting Actor or Actress.

Part II, "Index of Directors," lists alphabetically every director who appears in Part I. Each director's list of films is sorted by year, and within a year by title.

Part III, "Index of Actors," lists alphabetically every actor who appears in Part I. Each actor's list of films is sorted by year, and within a year by title. We tried as often as possible to group each actor's films under one name, with cross-references when the actor used two or more very different last names (e.g., Rita Hayworth and Cansino). But some actors appear under more than one first name (for example, Jimmy and James), and occasionally one name may conceal two different actors. We tried to address the latter problem by using Roman numerals to distinguish actors like the silent film Harrison Ford (I) and his latter-day counterpart (II).

The peculiarities of modern databases have not left our book unaffected. In the indexes, names with "Jr." or "Sr." sort as if the "Jr." or "Sr." were the first name. Thus "Smith, Jr., Robert" would be found after "Smith, Ivan" but before "Smith, Karen."

Finally, although we have consulted many sources and tried to maintain consistency, mistakes are inevitable. Please send any corrections for A Cast of Thousands to:
